Criteria

How did you earn this badge?

This badge is awarded in recognition of individuals who have actively engaged with IDB open data initiatives, offering constructive feedback, shared valuable insights on the potential of open data, and promoted the open data movement to foster transparency, innovation, and community engagement.

Why is it meaningful?

Being awarded the Open Data Person badge signifies membership in a forefront group of professionals and experts who are shaping the future of transparency, knowledge management, and innovation in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Members of this community:

- Actively engage in the appraisal and enhancement of the IDB's open data initiatives, ensuring they evolve to meet regional needs and challenges
- Share their expert insights and experience on open data, raising the quality and impact of these programs for all stakeholders
- Lead the way in promoting and adopting open data principles, fostering a movement that supports economic and social development through transparency and open collaboration
- Contribute to a culture of information accessibility that empowers evidence-based decision-making, civic innovation, and public engagement in the region
